It's a paradox. So, living with uncertainty, ambiguity and fallibility is the human condition. If someone tells you they can predict the future or some other such delusion ask them to define what it is to be human. One of the by-products of fallibility and ambiguity is the tolerance-intolerance dialectic.

Error orientation and intuitive decision making

The nature of fallibility seems greatly misunderstood in the risk industry as defined by a binary worldview. The binary worldview has an either/or frame on how it understands life. Binary thinking avoids the complexity of real living by framing the world as simply: good or bad, black or white and good or evil.
