Social Problems Theory. This theory asserts that crimes are committed due to matters beyond the control of the criminal. People might commit crimes because of poverty, racism, social status and other constructs that hold the criminal down. For example, a man robs a convenience store to get money for medicine for his newborn baby.

This paper focuses on the referral structure (and the primary definers within this structure) in terms of which elder abuse is being defined as a social problem in Canada and interest groups are being mobilized to deal with the alleged problem. Preliminary research indicates that the major impetus is, in the main, not coming from organizations of the elderly but from various professional groups and governmental agencies who have laid claim to elder abuse as an issue requiring social action.
